SPEECH OF GENERAL M. W. RANSOM.

The great feature of the Fair and the occasion of the large assemblage on Thursday, was the address of Gen. M. W. Ransom, which we deem no apology necessary in commenting upon at some length, and giving some quotations which we gathered therefrom, it being acknowledged by the thousands of listeners to be one of the most eloquent that the people of North Carolina have listened to in many days.

The speaker expressed his pleasure at meeting on that occasion so many of the noble sons and daughters of the old North State, and uttered the hope that these pleasant reunions of the people, for the purpose of promoting an interest in the cause of agriculture, were but omens of which shall at no distant day conquer the officulties which are weighing us down.

After alluding to the trials which the efforts to surmount the obstructions that prevent them from taking their place upon the car of prosperity, he contrasted in eloquent terms the struggles of the colomists who first settled upon American soil and those of our people at this time, and strain, alluding to the condition of our wealth which should be ours. orefathers a little over two hundred years ago, and what they accomplished, though we fear we shall do the General injustice Blue Ridge. Says he:

in attemping to quote his language: And yet from this forlorn beginning, with these amble means, they laid the foundations and tarted the superstructure of a government which has been the wonder, and I trust will be the blessing, of a world. They have populated a continent with forty millions of human beings, and established a civilization which shines over whole habitable globe like the glory of mother sun. With this example before our eyes, shall I ask if eight millions of the descendants of these same ancestors, with the innumerable. ountless, inestimable advantages and blessings which we possess, will surrender to gloom and despair? Have we not the same bright skies over ur heads which shone upon the fortitude of our reat forefathers? Do we not tread the same oil that bore their firm and manly steps to forhe same high motives in our hearts that led hem to victory over the flood, the savage and courses that we possess in the press, the elec that with these indescribable advantages over our ancestors, the South can and will recover from her disaster. I prefer to believe, and to believe with faith, that now that the storm has passed and the clouds are settling in the deep bosom of the ocean, that the billows of passion will subside like the waves of the sea, and that there may be again reflected from the calm face of the great leep the blessed light of peace-a light that can hever come to us except from the blessed sun of liberty. I prefer to look on this picture rather than have my eyes seared by gazing on a blasted desert of despair, parched and arid waste, without one green spot, with no crystal fountains. nothing but the Marah-Spring of a bloody struggle, with its perpetual waters of bitterness and hate a widening, deepening gulf of sectional
